President Roosevelt, after consultation with Secretary Hay, Assistant Secretary Loomis and members of his retary Loomis and members of his cabinet immediately identified with the state department, has determined to appoint hereafter to important places in the consular service men who al-ready are in the service and have had experience and training in minor posi-tions which will render them the more capable of filling places of higher grade

Men of Experience.

Men of Experience.

The change in policy does not extend the civil service to the consular service, and it does not extend, necessarily, a consul's tenure of office at any particular place; but, it is pointed out, it does give reasonable assurance to the manufacturing and commercial interests of the United States, which particularly are interested in the extension of the country's trade, that in a comparatively brief time all important consular situations will be filled with men not only of character and ability, but with men who by training and experience are especially qualified to advance the trade interests of the United States.

Mr. Loomis discussed with the presi-Mr. Loomis discussed with the president several appointments in the service that are to be made soon. It is understood that all the appointees will be men who now are filling places of lesser importance in the service. They are to be promoted, and in turn their places will be filled with men who have not had the experience they have had.
